WEU MUS NU KU NE.

THE system in which the Wea language is here written, is substantially that recommended by Pickering, and adopted to some extent in writing the Indian languages.—The simplicity of the system lies in the uniform sound that is given to each vowel, and in the use of a distinct character for every sound. In the present case the adoption of a distinct character to designate every variety of sound was deemed impracticable and unnecessary. To have done so, would have burdened the system with a multitude of vowel characters, the only effect of which would be, to make its acquisition more difficult, and to produce confusion in the mind of the learner.

The vowel a has two varieties of sound—the first of which predominates; and the second generally occurs in connection with a consonant coming after.

The vowel v has three varieties of sound—of which the two last most frequently occur.

e has a long and a short sound—the short one never occurring except when connected with a consonant.

i o u have each one uniform sound.

In the use of consonants the pupil is not taught their names. He is practised upon them, and taught to place the organs of speech in a proper position to pronounce any consonant in connection with a given vowel.

Simple Characters.

Vowels.
